Pathogenesis and Treatment of Diabetes Mellitus

In this book on diabetes mellitus both the pathogenesis and treatment of the disease will be discussed. Pathogenetic studies have led to the distinction between type I and type II diabetes. In type I hyperglycaemia is due predominantly to insulin deficiency; in type II insulin resistance is more important. Three pathogenetic factors are thought to play a role in the etiology of type I diabetes: heredity, viral infections and immunity. There may be a relationship between these three aspects since genetic predisposition changes the susceptibility to viral infections and/or the immunological defence against these infections. Insulinitis ensues. Autoimmune processes initiated by this chain of events may contribute to the destruction of the B cells in the islets of Langerhans and diabetes may eventually follow. This means that at the time of the sudden outbreak of the disease, the destructive process has already been active for years.
